The Coen brothers Joel and Ethan Coen are American film-makers. They write, direct and produce films together. Since 1984, they have made almost 20 films and have received more than 30 Oscar nominations. The brothers were born in Minnesota in the USA. Joel was born in 1954 and Ethan in 1957. After finishing high school in Minnesota, Joel studied Film-Making at New York University and Ethan studied Philosophy at Princeton University in New Jersey. They made their first film in 1984, but their first really successful film was Raising Arizona, starring Nicolas Cage and Holly Hunter, made in 1987. The Coen brothers became famous in 1996 when they produced and directed the hit film Fargo, starring Frances McDormand, who is also Joel's wife. She won a best actress Oscar for her performance in this film. Two years later, the Coen brothers wrote, directed and produced a film called The Big Lebowski, starring Jeff Bridges.

In 2001, they made a black and white film called The Man Who Wasn't There. A lot of film critics think that this is their best film. Perhaps their most famous film is the 2007 western No Country for Old Men. In this film, one of the characters finds $2 million of stolen money and decides to keep it. Some other people are looking for the money, including Javier Bardem, who plays the part of a killer. Bardem won an Oscar for his performance in this film. In 2010, the Coen brothers directed and produced another western called True Grit. The film was nominated for 10 Oscars, but, unfortunately, it didn't win any.
